The Last Night of Ballyhoo

by Alfred Uhry

October 14-November 7, 2010

Tony Award Winning The Last Night of Ballyhoo by Alfred Uhry. The piece explores the lives of Jewish southerners, a culture that he introduced to the American theater-going public with his Pulitzer Prize-winning play, Driving Miss Daisy. It is Atlanta, Georgia in December 1939. Hitler is about to invade Poland, Gone with the Wind is about to premiere, and a Jewish family so highly assimilated they have a Christmas tree in the front parlor - are looking forward to Ballyhoo, a lavish cotillion sponsored by their restrictive country club. Deftly exploring Jewish identity, including prejudice inflicted on Jews by other Jews, Uhry intersperses his serious message with sparkling banter, comedic non sequiturs, and hilarious characters and characterization.

Lebensraum

by Israel Horovitz

May 5-May 29, 2011

Lebensraum (living space) by Israel Horovitz, one of America's most celebrated contemporary and produced playwrights. Lebensraum is based on the fanciful and explosive premise that a German Chancellor might, as an act of redemption, invite six million Jews to relocate to Germany with promises of citizenship and employment. This dramatic, daring and darkly comic piece of theatre takes you from Boston to Bremerhaven, from Israel to Australia and to Berlin. It explores the possibility of making restitution for the Holocaust. Theatrical and inventive in its storytelling, with three actors playing over 40 sharply drawn characters, this story of love, economics, revenge, and forgiveness is guaranteed to get you talking.
